Heads-up: Fr. Hathaway is taking vacation from Monday, Sept. 14 to Friday, Sept. 25. On Sept. 14 mass will be at 7:00 am; St. Michael's LMC the normal schedule resumes Sept. 26. Fr. Timothy Castor will offer the Sunday mass on Sept. 20.

During Father's absence, the Confraternity of St. Peter will host a holy hour with rosary from 7:00 to 8:00 am for priests. You are welcome to attend.

Love of our parents consists in kind feelings and kind actions towards them.

We are bound to love our parents, as we are bound to love all men, because they are our neighbor, made in God's image. But this is not enough: They have a right to a special affection on our part, because we are their children, because they love us so tenderly, and confer so many benefits upon us. Are not his parents a child's best friends? Love consists in kind sentiments and kind actions. Joseph showed his affection for his old father; he fell on his neck and embracing him, wept (Gen. xlv. 29). But kind feelings are not enough. Let us not love in word nor in tongue, but in deed and in truth (1 John iii. 18). Therefore we ought to help our parents in destitution or sickness, and pray for them. The Prussian General Ziethen when a page, was once on guard at night in the king's antechamber. The king, Frederick I., finding he did not answer his summons, went out and found him asleep over a letter which he was writing to his mother, to send her his first earnings (thirty shillings) in the royal service. The king read the letter and was so touched that he put a roll of money in each of the young man's pockets, and the next morning appointed him to the army. When Blessed Thomas More had been put to death for the faith by order of Henry VIII., no one ventured to bury his remains; his daughter Margaret alone braved the tyrant's wrath, and he, respecting her filial devotion, allowed no one to interfere with her. Even among the lower animals we find examples of affection towards parents. The young lions share their prey with the old, and the storks warm those who have lost their plumage through age; they bring them food and assist them to fly. The Wise Man says: "Son, support the old age of thy father" (Ecclus. iii. 18). Remember how Our Lord on the cross provided for His Mother by commending her to the care of St. John (John xix. 26).

ON THE GOSPEL

... being moved with mercy towards her, he said to her: Weep not.

He Who comforts the afflicted, bidding her not to weep, teaches us that we are to be consoled in the presence of the dead, by the hope of their resurrection. Life meeting death halts the bier. And so follows: And he came near and touched the bier . And they that carried it stood still.

~ St. Ven. Bede; Priest, Confessor & Doctor of the Church; 672-735.
