4. Some of the socialistic theories could not possibly be realized; others might indeed be carried out, but they would be attended by fatal consequences.

The universal equality which Socialists propose to bring about, is an utterly impracticable idea, especially in regard to property. For if the State apportioned to every one the exact amount required for his livelihood, what more probable than that one would spend it all, and another put a part by. Thus an inequality would immediately arise; and to enforce the surrender of a man's savings would be sheer tyranny. The same endless variety which we see in nature, exists among mankind. Differences of age, of sex, of health, of physical power and mental endowments, above all of character and of manners cannot be effaced, and from these, differences of position and of possessions are inseparable. Just as in an army all the soldiers cannot be officers nor all privates, so all members of society cannot stand on the same level. Some must manage the business of the State, or occupy themselves with military affairs, and they must naturally hold a higher rank than the other members of the State, because they work more exclusively for the common weal. The happiness the Socialist dreams of is not attainable upon earth. Whatever the exertions that may be made to ameliorate the lot of man here below, none can succeed in eliminating from it suffering, sickness, and death. Sorrow and suffering are the portions of mankind; a life of peace and enjoyment is not for this world. True happiness is not to be found in sensual pleasures, but in God. While the whole world lasts, crime, vice and poverty cannot be banished from it. Our Lord says: "The poor you have always with you" (John xii. 8).

ON THE GOSPEL

The kingdom of heaven is like...

If the kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed, and faith is like to a grain of mustard seed (Mt 17:19): faith is then truly the kingdom of heaven, and the kingdom of heaven is faith. He therefore that has faith, possesses the kingdom of heaven. And the kingdom of heaven is within us, and faith is within us; for we read: For lo, the kingdom of God is within you (Mk 11:22). And elsewhere: Have in you the faith of God (Mk 9:22). Then Peter, who had all faith, received the keys of the kingdom of heaven, that he might open it to others.

~ St. Ambrose, Confessor, Bishop of Milan, Doctor of the Church; 339-397.
